2.5 Essay Questions

1) List and discuss the various factors that contributed to an increase in the crime rate between 1960 and 1989.
Answer: Following the conclusion of World War II, millions of young men returned to civilian life. As a result, a postwar baby boom occurred, which resulted in a skyrocketing birthrate. Thus, by 1960 the baby-boom generation was entering the teenage years. Given that a significant percentage of arrests typically involves those under age 25, a disproportional number of crime-prone-aged youth were now representative of the total population. Also, there were efforts by major police departments to improve professionalism by encouraging victims to file police reports. As the media publicized the rise in crime, some argue that this sensitized victims to the importance of reporting criminal activity. Additionally, many aspects in the quality of American life in the 1960s contributed to the skyrocketing crime rates. The influx of psychedelic drugs, a rising divorce rate, and the growth in secularism strained the social norms that governed society's behavior. Arguably, as these social norms became weakened, control over individual behavior and crime became increasingly difficult.

2) The U.S. Department of Justice suggests several reasons for the decline of crime between 1991 and 2012. List and explain three of those reasons.
Answer: A coordinated, collaborative, and well-funded national effort to combat crime, beginning with the Safe Streets Act of 1968 and continuing through the USA PATRIOT Act of 2001; stronger, better-prepared criminal justice agencies, resulting from increased spending by federal and state governments on crime-control programs; the growth in popularity of innovative police programs, such as community policing; sentencing reform, including various "get tough on crime" initiatives; a strong victims' movement and enactment of the 1984 federal Victims of Crime Act, and the 1994 Violence against Women Act, which established the Office for Victims of Crime in the U.S. Department of Justice; a substantial growth in the use of incarceration due to changes in sentencing law practice; the "war on drugs," begun in the 1970s, which resulted in stiff penalties for drug dealers and repeat drug offenders; and advances in forensic science and enforcement technology, including the increased use of real-time communications, the growth of the Internet, and the advent of DNA evidence.

3) Define and compare and contrast the UCR, NIBRS, and the National Crime Victimization Survey. How does each system serve a purpose in collecting and reporting data? What is their value in fighting crime? Describe the FBI's UCR/NIBRS Program, including its purpose, history, and what it tells us about crime in the United States today.
Answer: The Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR) Program is a statistical reporting program run by the FBI's Criminal Justice Information Services (CJIS) division. The UCR Program publishes Crime in the United States, which provides an annual summation of the incidence and rate of reported crimes throughout the United States.
The National Incident-Based Reporting System (NIBRS) is an incident-based reporting system that collects detailed data on every single crime occurrence. NIBRS data are replacing the kinds of summary data that have traditionally been provided by the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting Program.
The National Crime Victimization Survey (NCVS) is an annual survey of selected American households conducted by the Bureau of Justice Statistics to determine the extent of criminal victimization–especially unreported victimization–in the United States.

4) What are Part I Crimes? List and define three Part I crimes.
Answer: Part I offenses are a UCR/NIBRS offense group used to report murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, larceny/theft, motor vehicle theft, and arson, as defined under the FBI's UCR/NIBRS Program.
Murder is the unlawful killing of one human being by another. Rape involves unlawful sexual intercourse through force and without consent. Robbery is a personal crime involving the taking of another person's property by force or violence; this crime involves a face-to-face confrontation between a victim and a perpetrator. Aggravated assault is the unlawful, intentional inflicting, or attempted or threatened inflicting, of serious injury upon the person of another. Although aggravated assault and simple assault are standard terms for reporting purposes, most state penal codes use labels like first-degree and second-degree to make such distinctions. Burglary is the unlawful entry of a structure to commit a felony or a theft. Under the UCR/ NIBRS Program, the crime of burglary can be reported if 1) an unlawful entry of an unlocked structure has occurred, 2) a breaking and entering (of a secured structure) has taken place, or 3) a burglary has been attempted. Larceny-theft involves unlawfully taking property from the possession or constructive possession of another; unlike robbery, this crime does not involve the use of force. Motor vehicles are excluded from this category. Larceny is the most common of the eight major offenses, although probably only a small percentage of all larcenies are actually reported to the police because of the small dollar amounts involved. Motor vehicle theft is the theft or attempted theft of a motor vehicle. A motor vehicle is defined as a self-propelled road vehicle that runs on land surface and not on rails. The stealing of trains, planes, boats, construction equipment, and most farm machinery is classified as larceny under the UCR/NIBRS Program, not as motor vehicle theft. Arson is any willful or malicious burning or attempt to burn, with or without intent to defraud, a dwelling house, public building, motor vehicle or aircraft, personal property of another, and so on. Some instances of arson result from malicious mischief, some involve attempts to claim insurance money, and some are committed in an effort to disguise other crimes, such as murder, burglary, or larceny.

5) There is a new type of crime called flash robs. Define and explain the how it works, how many people are involved, and the issues facing store employees and owners.
Answer: Flash robs involve as many as 50 people. Store employees can do little to stop them and may even suffer injury. Participants have been known to punch an employee on the way out. In addition to the loss of merchandise, retailers are concerned about losing customers. "A frenzied group of teens snatching merchandise and running through store aisles creates panic and potential safety issues for customers and store employees," according to a 2011 white paper by the National Retail Federation.

6) Describe identity theft and the steps taken to combat it.
Answer: Identity theft is a crime in which an impostor obtains key pieces of information, such as Social Security and driver's license numbers, to obtain credit, merchandise, and services in the name of the victim. The victim is often left with a ruined credit history and the time-consuming and complicated task of repairing the financial damage. Techniques used by offenders include dumpster diving, shoulder surfing, eavesdropping, and the use of the Internet to obtain personal identifying information. Identity theft became a federal crime in 1998 with the passage of the Identity Theft and Assumption Deterrence Act. The 2004 Penalty Enhancement Act increased the penalty for various forms of identity theft.

2.6 Critical Thinking

1) List and explain the various data-gathering problems associated with the Uniform Crime Reports and discuss efforts made to address these issues.
Answer: For nearly 75 years, the UCR has served as this country's primary source for gathering crime data. Similar to other statistical data-gathering systems in the social sciences, shortcomings in its methodologies eventually surfaced. Many of these are related to the fact that UCR data are based mainly on citizen reports to the police. First, not all people report victimizations to the police. Second, certain types of crimes, particularly social-order offenses or victimless crimes, are rarely reported; white collar and high-technology offenses also rarely enter official statistics. Additionally, victim reports may not be accurate because a victim's memories may be faulty, victims may feel the need to impress or please the police, or may be under pressure to misrepresent the acts. There are a number of other methodological problems as well. One is the hierarchy rule, which records only the most serious offense at the scene of multiple criminal incidents and therefore suppresses counts of lesser crimes in incidents involving multiple offenses. Another is the fact that the UCR does not record crimes for Part II offenses unless an arrest is made. Therefore, acts such as forgery, vandalism, and disorderly conduct are unknown to the FBI unless there is an arrest of the offender. There are also a number of concerns that are Another concern has been the fact that some Part II offenses such as kidnapping and drug-law violations are serious enough to be upgraded to Part I offenses. As a result of these problems, one can conclude that the actual number of crimes reported by the FBI may be significantly less than the actual number of offenses committed. In an effort to improve the quantity and quality of crime data gathered by law enforcement, an incident-based reporting system, known as the National Incident-Based Reporting System (NIBRS), is being implemented to collect data on every single crime. While this will not solve all the problems discussed here, NIBRS has increased the number of offenses on which data is collected and records all offenses occurring in an incident. Hopefully, NIBRS will help to provide a more accurate picture of crime in the United States.

2) Define and comment on hate crimes. What are the Hate Crime Statistics Act of 1990 and the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 and how do they impact hate crimes?
Answer: A hate crime occurs when the defendant's conduct was motivated by hatred, bias, or prejudice, based on the actual or perceived race, color, religion, national origin, ethnicity, gender, or sexual orientation of another individual or group of individuals. The Hate Crime Statistics Act, signed into law by President George H. W. Bush in 1990. The act mandates a statistical tally of hate crimes be kept. The Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 created a new category of "crimes of violence motivated by gender." Congress defined this crime as "a crime of violence committed because of gender or on the basis of gender, and due, at least in part, to an animus based on the victim's gender." These laws have had an impact on how statistics are compiled and reviewed to be more consistent and clear in their definition of who are victims of hate crimes.

3) Recent concerns about gun crime in the wake of various mass shootings has led to increased debate about gun control. Discuss the role of gun control and the constitutional guarantees of the right to bear arms. Include an analysis of the 2015 shootings at the Emanuel AME Church and Umpqua Community College, as well as the 2012 shootings in Newtown and Aurora, and discuss the effect they had on the communities and on gun control.
Answer: Guns and gun crime seem to pervade American culture. In 2015, a mass shooting in Charleston, South Carolina at the Emanuel AME Church took 9 lives; several months later, 9 people were killed and 7 injured during a mass shooting at Umpqua Community College in Oregon. In the 2012 Newtown, Connecticut, school shootings 28 people died, including the shooter and 20 first graders. Also in 2012, James Egan Holmes opened fire in a crowded theater in Aurora, Colorado, during a midnight showing of the movie The Dark Knight Rises, killing 12 people and injuring 58 others. These events, happening in rapid succession, led to strident calls for gun control at both the state and national level. Constitutional guarantees of the right to bear arms have combined with historical circumstances to make ours a well-armed society and guns are used in many types of crimes. Both federal and state governments have responded to the public concern over the ready availability of handguns. Federal legislation such as the 1994 Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act and the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act are designed to regulate the sale and ownership of firearms and a number of states have passed legislation tightening controls over handguns and assault weapons. However, the U.S. Supreme Court has come down strongly in support of the Second Amendment right to possess firearms, striking down some gun-control regulations as violating that right.
