Bodrero (2002) says terrorist behavior differs from standard patterns of criminal behavior because terrorists are highly motivated and loyal to a particular cause. Whereas ordinary criminals are opportunistic, terrorists are focused. They may select targets of opportunity, but the target has a symbolic value. Terrorists use crime to make a symbolic statement about a political cause.

65. George is a young African-American inmate serving time in Folsom after living a difficult life moving from foster home to foster home, never really connecting with anyone or bonding with another individual. Having just returned from serving extended periods of time in administrative segregation, George is feeling angry and wants revenge. He is approached in the yard by another inmate who suggests that he seek the counsel of Raffi, an in-house Imam of sorts. Raffi spends hours with George, sensing George's vulnerability to suggestion – Raffi channels George's anger, convincing him that he (George) is a victim of "the evils of West" and that George can do something about it. Raffi says he will show George how if George is willing to prove himself worthy. George begins to spend more time reading militant Islamic writings and meeting with other converted inmates. George believes he has now "found his way" and "is worthy" and seeks out Raffi for guidance on "how". Raffi then introduces him to others in the group and assigns George a "very important job".

85. What is practical criminology?

ANSWER: Practical criminology focuses on the common actions of lawbreakers. Police officers are not as concerned with theories of criminality as they are with the practical aspects of criminal behavior. They want to know what criminals do so that they may deter them from committing a crime or catch them after the crime is committed.

86. According to Bodrero, what are the practical behavioral differences between terrorists and criminals? What is the significance of Bodrero's argument in regard to investigative responses to terrorism?

ANSWER:
• Criminals are unfocused. Terrorists focus their actions toward a goal.
• Criminals may live in a criminal underworld, but they are not devoted to crime as a philosophy. Terrorists are dedicated to a cause.
• Criminals will make deals to avoid punishment. Terrorists rarely cooperate with officials because they do not wish to betray their cause.
• Criminals usually run when confronted with force. Terrorists tend to attack. Criminals strike when the opportunity to do so is present. Terrorists strike against symbols after careful planning.
• Criminals rarely train for crime. Terrorists prepare for and rehearse their operations.
• Police officers can take advantage of the behavioral characteristics of typical criminals when investigating a crime; however, these tactics do not work in countering terrorism. Law enforcement, military, and security officials need to focus on ideology, group and individual behavior, and sharing information over broad geographical regions to successfully investigate terrorism.

87. What are the three key questions about radicalization, according to Horgan?

ANSWER: The process of becoming a terrorist involves three distinct phases. In the first phase, a person must decide to become a terrorist, and this is followed by a decision to remain in a terrorist group. Both of these decisions return to the arguments about justifying violence, but there are points where people decide that they can no longer accept terrorism. Horgan believes this leads to a third process, disengagement—the behavior of people who decide to abandon terrorism. Horgan believes these pathways to terrorism are more important than searching for a definitive profile of terrorist behavior.

88. Discuss Sageman's six-step radicalization model. Do you agree with this model? Why or why not?

ANSWER: • It starts with an alienated young man.
• Meets other alienated young men and form bond; outdoing each other in zeal to express love for the group.
• They "discover" religion as a way of giving meaning to their lives.
• Terrorism enters the equation, if the new found religious orientation turns to violence. Most groups stop at this point.
• They must meet a broker, an activist who knows actual terrorists, and be accepted by an actual terrorist group.
• Militants join terrorists as a group decision.
Views will vary.

89. What is alienation?

ANSWER: A concept closely associated with radicalization is alienation, a term used in several branches of the social sciences, as well as in other disciplines such as theology. Many sociologists define alienation as a process by which an individual or group becomes separated from the values, norms, and mores of the dominant social world. This leads to self-estrangement. The concept was initially popularized by Karl Marx's work on economic alienation, and many sociologists of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries expanded his approach, focusing on concepts like social isolation, lack of meaning, and normlessness

90. What are the five issues that are common to groupthink scenarios?

ANSWER: Five issues are common to groupthink scenarios. First, an external issue creates stress within the group. Second, the group is isolated from other groups or actors. Third, group members have similar backgrounds and belief systems. Fourth, members believe that bias leadership is normal. Finally, the group lacks a systematic method for making decisions.

91. How does Abdulmutallab's story illustrate the complexity of radicalization?

ANSWER: Abdulmutallab's story illustrates the complexity of radicalization. He would seem to have been a poor candidate to fall under the influence of Arabian militants. Born to a wealthy Nigerian family, he received an elite education and went to the United Kingdom to complete boarding school and college. Yet, he felt alone and isolated. Raised with a set of tolerant Islamic values, his experience in London challenged his concept of right and wrong. He was alienated. He eventually found solace on militant websites and gravitated toward radicalism. Falling under the influence of a militant preacher, Abdulmutallab eventually joined a militant group in Yemen and began the attempted suicide mission.

92. What are some common forms of behavior associated with radicalization?

ANSWER: In the examples of Abdulmatallab, von Brunn, and Hammami, there are several common forms of behavior. First, it is interesting to note that all three men came from well-to-do, middle-class environments. The New York Times reports that most international attacks against the United States in the 21st century have come from well-educated terrorists from the middle class (Mackey, 2010). Gerald Post (2007) argues that such regularities are common to the radicalization process. All three men became deeply angered and filled with moral indignation. This was reinforced by identifying with a victimized group and the desire to violently redress grievances. They were alienated from mainstream thought as they expressed anger, and they sought to address their situations by doing something meaningful. Finally, there was some type of event that triggered their decision to take violent action.

93. What are the common patterns of converting people in prison to violent radical causes as posited by Mark Hamm? What does Hamm say lies behind most all prison conversions?

ANSWER: Hamm found five common patterns of converting people to violent radical causes:

- Crisis convert: The first contains people in crisis, and they will respond to religious overtures for emotional support.
- Protection seeking convert: A second type involves people seeking protection in the prison environment; these people will convert because the radical group offers safety.
- Searching converts: The third group of potential converts, searchers, has had little exposure to religion, and they are fascinated by both the multiplicity of religious expressions inside prison and the feeling of belonging for members of the group.
- Manipulating converts: The fourth personality is common in prison; it involves manipulating people for personal gain.
- Free world converts: Hamm classifies chaplains from the outside as free world recruiters.

Behind almost every conversion, according to Hamm, lies a friendship or kinship link, but sometimes a new inmate simply meets somebody in the yard and converts to a new faith.

94. How did Debray modify Guevara's work on guerilla warfare?

ANSWER: The theory of guerrilla war came after the appearance of Guevara's work, which was popularized by a French socialist named Régis Debray. In Revolution in the Revolution, Debray (1967) summarizes his concept of Latin American politics. He writes that the region has one dominating issue: poverty. Poverty threads through the entire fabric of Latin American life and entwines divergent cultures and peoples in a common knot of misery. Poverty is responsible for the imbalance in the class structure, as the wealthy cannot be maintained without the poverty of the masses. Debray sees only one recourse: The class structure must be changed and wealth redistributed. Because the wealthy will never give up their power, revolution is the only method of change. Debray's prime target was the United States. Behind every power in the south stands the United States, according to his thesis. Debray held the United States responsible for maintaining the inequitable class structure, and he shared the common Marxist belief that North American wealth caused Latin American poverty. It seemed quite logical, therefore, to target the United States. As did Frantz Fanon, Debray continually talked of revolution. He saw little need for terrorism, however, and he minimized the role of urban centers in a revolt. Debray believed revolution was essentially an affair for poor peasants, and it could begin only in a rural setting with regional guerrilla forces. Terrorism had no payoff. At best, it was neutral, and at worst, it alienated the peasants needed for guerrilla support. According to Debray, for a revolution to work, it needed to begin with guerrillas fighting for justice and end with a united conventional force. Terrorism would not accomplish this objective.
